Primum non nocere (Classical Latin : [?pri?m?? no?n n??ke?r?]) is a Latin phrase that means " first, do no harm
." The phrase is sometimes recorded as primum nil nocere. Non-maleficence, which is derived from the maxim, is one of the principal precepts of bioethics that all students in healthcare are taught in school and is a fundamental principle throughout the world.

The expression "first do no harm," which is a Latin phrase, is not part of the original or modern versions of the Hippocratic oath, which was originally written in Greek. The Hippocratic oath, written in the 5th century BCE, does contain language suggesting that the physician and his assistants should not cause physical or moral harm to a patient. The first known published version of "do no harm" dates to medical texts from the mid-19th century, and is attributed to the 17th century English ...

No-one wants our children to be used as research guinea pigs. High standards of ethical oversight are needed to ensure no child is exposed to possible harm. While the medical research ethics model was developed to provide exactly this level of protection, perversely, in education, it may be exposing our children to harm.

A literal reading of “first do no harm” would, therefore, lead the clinician to do nothing at all. A more accurate formulation is “first do no net harm.”
The Latin translation does not roll off the tongue: “primum non plus nocere quam succurrere” (“above all, do not harm more than succour”).

First Do No Harm was published on 8 July, having been commissioned by the Rt Hon Jeremy Hunt MP in 2018, during his tenure as Secretary of State for Health. It examines the prescribing of Primodos, a hormonal pregnancy test taken by women between the 1950s and late 1970s and the harm caused to those children (now adults).
